

frugalista meets fashionista

the star . com

Maple Leaf lawsuit widens

August 27, 2008

JOANNA SMITH
STAFF REPORTER
NOOR JAVED
STAFF REPORTERS

Two new lawsuits, including a $100-million national class-action lawsuit, have been launched against Maple Leaf Foods on behalf of consumers who bought ready-to-eat meats on the recall list.

Cezanne Bilodeau, of Ottawa, is the named representative plaintiff on the new nation-wide lawsuit being filed in Toronto Wednesday.

REUTERS
A woman works to sterilize meat processing and packaging equipment at a Maple Leaf Foods plant in this Aug. 21, 2008, file photo.

"Cezanne and her son purchased and consumed four different cold meat products on the recall list and they have been experiencing symptoms of cramps and nausea for approximately the last four or five days," said lawyer Ted Charney of Toronto-based firm Falconer Charney LLP, which is launching the suit jointly with Sutts Strosberg LLP. "And they have gone to the doctor and had blood tests done."

Bilodeau could not immediately be reached for comment and the statement of claim was not immediately available.

None of these allegations has been proven in court.

A Toronto woman was also named plaintiff in a separate lawsuit launched by Stevensons LLP.

Adrienne Adie, 66, became seriously ill twice in July after eating Schneiders All Beef Bologna, a product not on the list of items recalled by Maple Leaf. She has not yet been tested for listeriosis.

"Her concern is listeriosis, but of course things have yet to be established," said Brian Kirkland, which Stevensons LLP.

In a release, Stevensons said they wrote to Maple Leaf requesting that the companies carefully review the list of affected products and the distribution establishments, which are to be decontaminated.

"Ms. Adle has been to the hospital in an ambulance once already. Others have died. This is a public health crisis. Maple Leaf Foods needs to expand their testing and decontamination efforts to satisfy the public that the problem has been contained."

Charney said his firm's website has received more than 10,000 hits after posting information about the lawsuit.

"People from across the country have completed applications indicating that they are experiencing similar symptoms from consuming products on the recall list," he said.

"Others are very concerned because they and their families have consumed the products, and they don't know if they are going to develop the symptoms," Charney said.

Charney said he hopes to join this lawsuit together with the four separate lawsuits filed Monday and Tuesday by Merchant Law Group, but it is too early to tell whether that would happen.

Darren Williams, a lawyer based in the Vancouver office of Merchant Law, said Wednesday the firm had not yet decided whether to join them all together.

Ads by Google

Retire To Costa Rica

Starting at 99K with 20k Down
Register Today For Your Dream Home!
www.CostaLandSales.com

1 secret of a flat belly

Cut down 9 lbs in a week by keeping this 1 weird secret
www.FatBurningFurnace.com

» Canada's Best Mortgages

Rates from 2.50%, 100+ lenders
Apply Now! (No SIN needed)
Canada.GetMyQuote.ca/Mortgages